The Prodigal's Actual Return.

The prodigal son had just come back, His clothes were torn and this, He limped and had a furtive glance. In fact, he was "all in"; Down from the the doorway came his dad,

His uncle, sixty-two years old, Who started in to rant, And say, "You good for nothing stiff, Why eame you back to us, Why try to loaf around these parts

And maybe start a fusa?"

His mother and his aunt,

That's right," spoke up his father, too, "You worthless looking shad, You are a melancholy dub, I wish I never had . Been fool enough to name you John, And call you junior, too,

From what I lately have been told, You're just a common stew!" "Now here," a gentle roice broke in, "This thing has gone too far, He is my son, and even though His stock is under par, want you all to stuke his hand, I want you all to raugh, am his mother, he's my son-Bring on the fatted calif" Epilogue.

And you may put it down, my friends, That what she said was done You'll never beat a mother When she's fighting for her son.
